

This series narrates of real events in the notarial practice.

PART 5. The rich lady.

She drives a Jaguar cabriolet with really many cylinders under its front cover. This car really has a lot of power in it, and she uses that power definitely.

She also loves to play realtime Monopoly. Once she said: "Listen dear, now I have a complete street. Great isn't it!"

She hates waiting. Waiting triggered her to already seek for the deputy civil law notary handling her case. This deputy civil law notary was sneaking around not to be seen by her to avoid her difficult questions.

She was scheduled again and of course the civil law notary was in overtime.

When she had to wait again, because the notary had walked a bit in his appointment schedule, she asked an employee: "Say, last time I had to wait so long. Can you report that next time? Then I can go shopping at the Byenkorf."

Since the notary often walked out of his schedule, it soon happened that she had to wait a while again, after sitting down on the special design pink sofa in the waiting room. That sofa was special in a way, that a lot of clients first asked if that thing was actually meant to sit on.

Anyway, the employee saw the wait coming and so went to the waiting room to inform her: "Madam, the notary has walked out of his schedule, so you might have to wait half an hour."

With a definite glint in her eyes, she says: "Fine, then I'll go shopping to the Byenkorf."

Half an hour later she is back, accompanied by bags full of great shopping items from the Byenkorf. Her eyes were still glistening!
